PROPHETIC DREAM.

Death Comes to Franklin Man as Foretold.

The funeral of Garcelia L. Currier, whose dying hour was revealed to him in a dream, took place at the Congregational church at Franklin, N. H., on Wednesday. Last Friday night he dreamed that his end would come at a certain hour on Sunday which he named to his brothers, and the event vindicated the prophecy. The bearers today were his brothers, Charles T. Currier of Franklin, Samuel D. Currier and Calvin E. Currier of Andover, and Everett A. Currier of Stoneham, Mass.

The Dutch Steamer Banwan Driven Ashore and Crew Rescued By Life Savers

British and French Warships Exposed to Fury of Gale and Serious Damage Expected.

(Special to The Herald)
London, Eng., Dec. 3.—One of the fiercest gales on record struck the southeastern coast of England today, paralyzing merchant and naval shipping. The Dutch steamer Banwan was driven ashore near Deal. Her crew was rescued by life savers. They had been in collision during the night with a large steamship in the Downs. The great International fleet of British and French warships in the English channel, Dover straits and western fringe of the North Sea was caught by the fury of the gale and it is expected that serious disaster will result. The steamer which the Banwan collided with was the steamer Niobe of Amsterdam. After the collision the Niobe drifted at the mercy of wind and tide until she went ashore near North Deal in a waterlogged condition. A big hole was stove in the starboard side of the Banwan by the collision.

END OF THE REBELLION PREDICTED

(Special to The Herald)
Cape Town, South Africa, Dec. 3.—The capture of General Charles DeWet, the foremost leader of the rebellious Boers, is expected to result in the speedy collapse of the insurrection. Gen. DeWet will be tried as a traitor either at some point in South Africa or England.

ATTEMPT TO CUT OFF MONTENEGRIN FORCES

(Special to The Herald)
Rome, Dec. 3.—The Montenegrin government announces that the Austrians have concentrated efforts between Vishegrad and Priboj, the past five days, in an attempt to cut off the Montenegrin army from the Servians, but have failed. The Austrian losses in the fighting are given as 600 killed and wounded.

VIGOROUS FIGHTING IN NORTHERN SPHERE

(Special to The Herald)
Paris, Dec. 3.—Vigorous cannonading has marked the fighting between the allies and the Germans in the northern sphere, according to an official statement issued at the French war office this afternoon. The allies have resumed their dyke cutting operations in West Flanders, and the floods now extend north as far as Dixmude. The French have made slight advances in the Argonne, where German attacks have been repulsed.

REPORTED AERIAL RAID OVER ESSEN

(Special to The Herald)
London, Dec. 3.—An Exchange telegraph dispatch from the Hague states that it is reported in that city that there was a recent aerial raid made over Essen, in Prussia, where the Krupp gun works are located. The dispatch says: "A foreign aircraft is reported to have dropped bombs upon Krupp factories, but the extent of the damage, if any, is unknown."

VAUDEVILLE AT MUSIC HALL

The George W. Scott-Dorothy Marke Company present the novel comedy variety travesty entitled "A Model Couple." Comedy scenes in every day life are depicted, showing the complications that arise between a gay husband and a jealous wife. Billy Day, an Esquimaux poodle, adds to the act by his faithfulness to his master in spite of all difficulties. Mr. Scott introduces parody songs and dances in the act. Both he and Miss Marke have been seen in this city several times before with dramatic companies. Russell and Moore appear in a comedy singing, talking and dancing act. They have many changes and two special scenes. They sing the following songs: "The Ragpickers," "Dancing the Blues Away," "The Spaniard that Blighted My Life," and "Two Only One Idea About the Girls, and That's To Love Them."

TO ERECT LARGE SIGN 'LAND OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS'

The Portsmouth Board of Trade has secured permission from the Boston and Maine railroad to erect its big illuminated electric illuminated sign on Noble's Island on land owned by the railroad. The contractor in charge will begin the work by erecting the same at once. The sign heard will be 12 by 60 feet and will bear a slogan or legend advertising Portsmouth. "Brazil, the Land of the Southern Cross," was the subject of the illustrated lecture given at Association Hall Wednesday evening by Prof. Charles Furlong, under the auspices of the Grafton Club. Mr. Furlong fully sustained his reputation as a successful lecturer and entertaining lecturer. His remarks were illustrated by a large number of lantern slides, making his words seem more important and the country greater in the history of the world, than that country is by the mass of people generally considered. His travels in South America made him master of the subject and he gave his audience an evening of rare entertainment.

THE BELOVED ADVENTURER

CHAPTER XI.

The Serpent Comes to Eden.

Twice since she had become Lady Cecil had Betty seen the soft summer moon reach its fullness, spread over ancient Croftleigh a mantle of silver glory, and work sweet magic in her heart, even as it had in a wonderful garden when time was young.

Throwing a filmy scarf about her bare shoulders, Betty now stole out to the terrace that overlooked the sunken garden where heavy-headed roses weighted the air with perfume. Leaning dreamily against the balustrade was the figure of a man, and with a tender smile the girl moved softly to his side. His hand closed over hers, as, without taking his eyes from the silent beauty spread before them, he quoted softly:

"The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees

And they did make no noise, in such a night

Troilus methinks mounted the Trojan walls,

And sigh'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,

Where Cressid lay that night."

Into the girl's eyes came a shadow, and her lips parted for a little wistful sigh.

"I cannot say back anything that would be pretty and true," she whispered. "Out in Nevada they thought me well educated—I even went one year to hearing school in Denver—but I can't say those pretty things, as you do, even when I feel them in my heart. You won't ever be ashamed of me, will you, dear, even when you take me among beautiful women who know all the things I do not? I think I would just die if you ceased to love me, but if you were ashamed of me, that would break my heart, and that would be worse than dying."

Cecil took her into his arms and looked tenderly into the wistful eyes raised to his face.

"Sweetheart," he said gravely, "among the fairest and most brilliant of all the earth you would be to me as that moon is among the falling stars."

"Then you will never regret—you are happy, beloved?" she murmured and nestled closer in his arms.

"Could I regret entering into paradise?" he asked tenderly. "A paradise more perfect than he had ever dreamed might lie beyond the skies? Nights and days of so perfect joy as to make one's heart almost afraid—

"—joy most like divine

Of all I ever dreamt or knew,

To see thee, hear thee, call thee mine."

Abruptly he paused and drew her closer to his breast. A strange chill seemed to creep like a menace into the perfumed warmth of the night, stirring the old fears which they sighed that further lake which he had thought to banish.

"O, misery! must I lose that too?" The girl shivered in his arms.

"Let us go in. I—I am afraid!" she whispered.

It was at this moment that Mr. Monte Carson, for the second time, set foot upon the shore of England.

Mr. Carson's departure from the island, on the same day that Lord Cecil learned that in following the dictates of his heart he had won for his bride not only the girl he loved but an American heiress such as he had given his word to wed, had not been volum-ary, but at the urgent suggestion of a competent representative of Scotland Yard, and his temper had not been sweetened, nor his determination to possess for himself the now famous "Golden Hope" mine in any degree abated.

By good chance he made the acquaintance of two gentlemen of his own profession, Messrs. Marks and Badger, who had on one occasion encountered Lord Cecil, to their discomfort, and from them obtained letters of introduction to co-workers in the country he had just left, the most consequential being one to the Countess Larovich. Upon landing in New York, Mr. Carson promptly changed his name and clothing, and purchased a passage on the next outward-bound steamer.

In the Countess Larovich, Carson found a ready coadjutor, for twice had the adventuress's schemes been upset by Lord Cecil, and her hatred of the nobleman was intense. She still maintained her country home at Ashley Grange, which place, adjoining Cecil's estate, afforded an excellent base of operations. Carson was installed as a guest, his presence being kept a secret, while the Countess recommissioned and hid her plans.

As the summer wore on, Betty's happiness became vaguely clouded. Since her marriage she had not left her new home, and the scores of invitations to country houses and Scotch fishings which had poured in after the public announcement that once more a mistress ruled at Croftleigh, had, at Cecil's suggestion, been declined. To Betty it seemed incredible that one who might walk with the most noble and famous and receive the homage granted high birth and present wealth should by preference absent himself from what she communally fancied to be a world of joyous splendor. It was not possible for her still child-like heart to see life through Cecil's disillusioned eyes, or to understand that these Arcadian days were to him of so perfect a happiness that the suggestion of exchanging them for the banal artificialities of "society" seemed a profanation. It was not on her own account, but on Cecil's, that her eyes grew troubled as the secluded life continued. Was it that he was ashamed to present her to the people of his class? This was the thought that from an intangible beginning grew to be a haunting shadow. More and more frequently she stole away from the old house, to wander alone in the blossoming fields.

It was on such a roaming expedition that Betty encountered the Countess Larovich, who, at sight of her, advanced smilingly.

"I am afraid I have missed my way," she said, indicating the most direct route to Ashley Grange.

"No—I guess not. I don't yet know this range very well, myself," she responded with the frank friendliness of her Western land. "It lies off this way, but that is all I know."

The Countess surveyed her with friendly insolence.

"Oh, I see—you are a stranger. A new servant at Croftleigh, I presume?"

The girl's face did not change, but the Countess' keen eyes noted with satisfaction the flush of added color that crept into her cheeks.

"I am Lady Cecil, Madam," Betty said quietly.

"My dear child, forgive me!" the Countess cried with perfect simulation of embarrassed confusion. "One is so apt to be misled by appearances—that is, I should say, I had fancied Lady Cecil—older, you know. You must pardon me—Lord Cecil would never forgive such a silly mistake, and we've been awfully good friends for his longest. I am the Countess Larovich, you know, and I've told Henry—Lord Cecil's word to wed, had not been volum-

all I should say—not less than a dozen times within the past month to bring you over whenever he is dropping in for tea, but he always makes some silly excuse! You won't mention my meeting you and making such an absurd mistake, will you, my dear child?"

"No, I will not mention the incident," Betty responded gravely. "I am sorry I can not direct you to your path. Good afternoon," she added, and hurried away that the other woman might not see the tears of mortification that she could no longer restrain.

Smiling with satisfaction the Countess strolled through a plantation of young trees and joined the waiting Mr. Carson.

"The game is well begun," she said, "and if I know anything of character, it will be short. That little child is a fool, but a proud one."

"She won't be so proud when I've finished with her," Carson granted maliciously. "And the thing can't be ended up any too soon for me," he added glumly. "I don't what you would call enjoy myself, duckin' around through the hedges in this here ready-to-wear country. Is that maid of Betty's all fixed?"

"The maid can be depended upon," the Countess assured him. "This very evening she shall play her little part in the comedy. I will instruct Lorraine as soon to write a suitable letter, and I will wire to the actor of whom I spoke—I have been at some pains to keep him from securing an engagement in his regular line; he is a very good actor."

"All right, then. And you'll be well-paid for your trouble when the thing is all fixed, don't you worry about that," Carson declared.

"I am usually well paid," the Countess observed dryly.

For a long while after she left the Countess, Betty wandered miserably, unable to return to the old house that had sheltered her now dead happiness. Her poor little soul had suffered a terrible wound—all her vague fancies had been crystallized into a sickening fact—that Cecil was ashamed of her, and since this Countess who was his intimate friend had mistaken her for a servant, she was undoubtedly justified. That—as she was convinced he did—Cecil still loved her, took nothing from her bitterness, but rather was an added shame. That he should love one whom he could not proudly present to all the world but must fondle in secret degradation and tarnished that love. Yet, after all, perhaps she was mistaken—perhaps superstitiousness exaggerated trifles and misunderstanding what were merely the habits of a society with which she was unacquainted. She would wait for further proof before allowing the joy of life to be strangled by this thing. With that determination, Betty returned to the manor house. As she hurried to her room to dress for dinner, James, the faithful valet, intercepted her.

"My Lordship pleases," he said, "if Lord Cecil directed me to say that he would not return to dinner—he was suddenly called to Cantlebury in a matter of some importance of game thought to have been poached from Croftleigh covers, and Your Lordship couldn't be located before he left."

"Very well, James," Betty said, with a sudden sense of loneliness. "They need not serve dinner. Have some or lose the match. Miyake has been but on the trail of Yungato Taka, a Japanese wrestler, who is under the management of Martin Julian, and he is eager to meet his fellow orator, who also claims the world's championship."

James bowed, but with a troubled face, for he loved this young mistress. "If I might make so bold, my Lady," he said diffidently, "the cook will be rare disappointed. 'E read in Tit-Bits as 'ow in America no one ever ate anything but fried beefsteak and prunes, and he has prepared some—o found out how to do it by writing to a cousin in St. Louis, America—as a surprise for Your Ladyship."

Betty smiled.

"You will thank the cook, James, and tell him he must prepare me an American dinner some other time—tonight I am not hungry," she said gently, and passed on to the old library.

Rather listlessly Betty sank into the chair in front of Lord Cecil's writing table, and rested her chin upon her clasped hands. Presently she became aware that she was subconsciously reading what lay under her eyes—the second sheet of an unfinished letter, in her husband's hand, left carelessly upon the desk. Before she realized, her brain had taken the meaning from her eyes.

"A good business proposition, anyway, as it turns out. She has a million dollars, you know. Of course I can't possess such a little Wild West savage to my friends—"

The writing stopped abruptly, as though the writer had been interrupted.

Betty rose stiffly, her face white.

"There can be no further doubt," she whispered, and made her way slowly toward her bedroom.

No sooner had Betty left the library than a pair of curtains parted cautiously, a maid stole into the room, quickly removed the paper from the desk, and hurried out.

Early the following morning Lord Cecil again departed for Cantlebury, in connection with the poached game, and Betty hurried into the open, as had always been her wont when her heart was burdened. She felt that she must reach some decision—she could not continue to live in the humiliating position of a wife of whom the husband was ashamed.

As she turned the corner of a lane, Betty was astonished to come face to face with Mr. Monte Carson, who greeted her with a smile of mingled affection and sympathy.

"What are you doing here?" the girl demanded coldly.

Mr. Carson appeared grieved.

"For what would I be here, except to help you, Betty?" he asked in reply.

"To help me—that is likely!" the girl laughed bitterly. "Have you discovered that I am the owner of another mine which you wish to steal?"

He looked at her reproachfully.

"Betty," he said gravely, "I know I've done some crooked things in my life, but I always done the best I could by you, and I've come back here to prove I'm a friend and don't bear no hard feelings, even after the way you turned on me for the sake of your husband. I was only tryin' to take care of you, Betty."

Tarro Miyake, Champion Jiu-Jitsu Wrestler, to Try Bothner

New York, Dec. 3.—Tarro Miyake, champion of the world at Jiu-Jitsu, is matched to meet George Bothner, welterweight champion of the world, at Brown's gymnasium on the night of December 14. Miyake is to throw Bothner three times within an hour times within the past month to bring you over whenever he is dropping in for tea, but he always makes some silly excuse! You won't mention my meeting you and making such an absurd mistake, will you, my dear child?"

"No, I will not mention the incident," Betty responded gravely. "I am sorry I can not direct you to your path. Good afternoon," she added, and hurried away that the other woman might not see the tears of mortification that she could no longer restrain.

Smiling with satisfaction the Countess strolled through a plantation of young trees and joined the waiting Mr. Carson.

"Very well, James," Betty said, with a sudden sense of loneliness. "They need not serve dinner. Have some and the thought-habits of youth are not easily broken.

"You—your actions looked pretty bad, Monte," she said slowly. "I did not mean to be unjust, ever, but you had given me cause to distrust you. What is it you have to say now?"

"I know you are proud, Betty, but I want you to hear me out," Carson told her. He seemed to ponder what would be the least painful words, and then continued:

"Pretty soon after I got back to New York I met a man who knew all about Lord Cecil—and what I heard brought me back here as quiet as I could come. He hasn't played square with you, Betty, has he?"

Betty's eyes flashed fiercely.

"I will hear nothing against my husband," she said quietly.

"Where is he today?" Carson asked, with a sudden change of tone.

"He has gone to Cantlebury," the girl replied shortly. "What of it?"

"He has not gone to Cantlebury—he is with the Countess Larovich, as he is almost every day," Carson announced calmly. "It hasn't taken me many days to get a line on your nobleman. Not only is he ashamed of you, but he is making love to another woman."

Every sign of color drained slowly from Betty's face, and her soft lips closed in a hard line.

"Did I ever break my word, Monte?" she asked softly.

"You shure never did, Betty," Carson declared gravely.

"Then listen. If you have lied to me, I swear I will kill you as I would a rat. I must know the truth, now, and all of it."

"I'm plumb sorry, Betty," Carson said sympathetically. "I shure am, but there ain't no doubt. Come with me."

In silence they walked rapidly along a mile of hedge-walled lanes. Presently they drew near the small stream that was the boundary between Croftleigh and Ashley Grange, and Carson, drawing the girl into the shelter of a clump of shrubbery, pointed to the opposite bank. Strolling in lover-like converse were two figures, one the unmistakable figure of Lord Cecil, the other the Countess Larovich. Even as Betty watched with burning eyes, the woman paused and raised her face, and the man crushed her in his arms as he pressed his lips to hers.

Betty drew back without a word, and walked away. Carson, with a triumphant smile hurried after her.

"You won't want to stay, I reckon, Betty," he said as he overtook her. She did not raise her eyes, but nodded.

"No. I will go away," she said calmly.

"I knew you would. I'm going to look out for you, little girl. I reckon you don't want to see him before you go," Carson suggested.

"No, I do not wish to see him," she replied in the same lifeless voice, so unlike her own. "Please take me away now, Monte."

"All right, Betty, you can count on old Monte," he said soothingly. "Everything is fixed—I know you'd want to go. Just you slip into the house and get your things, and I'll meet you at the foot of the drive in half an hour, with a machine. Don't you care—he ain't worth it."

At the same moment the Countess Larovich was looking up archly into the eyes of a man whose clothing duplicated that worn by Lord Cecil that day and whose figure was identical. His face was carefully and expertly made up to a portrait-like reproduction of the features of the nobleman.

"Do you always put so much spirit into your acting, M. Devoeux?" the Countess laughed. "My lips are crushed! Not quite, as yet—"

The actor swore softly as Carson's hurried entrance interrupted the little scene.

"It's all fixed," Carson informed the Countess with savage satisfaction. "I'll take the machine and pick her up at the end of the drive, and if ever this staring fool sets eyes on her again, I hope to be shot for a Greaser!"

"You very probably will be shot for yourself if ever he sets eyes on you, my friend," the Countess commented, "so see to it that he doesn't!"

An hour later a motor was speeding swiftly toward Whitehaven. In it sat Betty, with pale, drawn face, and Mr. Monte Carson, on whose vindictive and greedy features was a grin of gratified triumph.

It was near the dinner hour when Lord Cecil returned from Cantlebury, where the matter of the poached game had been finally expounded, and with an eager light in his eyes hurried into the manor house. As he moved toward the stair, James came quietly forward and stopped him with a bow.

"Her Ladyship has gone out, my Lord," he said, and in the man's voice Cecil caught a troubled note. "She left a note in the library, my Lord."

With a vague sensation of impending disaster Cecil hurried to the dim old room and flipped open the envelope lying upon his writing table. His face grew white as his eyes flashed over the tear-dimmed page.

"Beloved," he read, and seemed to hear the soft caressing voice that was used to whisper the endearment in his ear. "I have gone away, and you will never see me again. I know that you love another, and that you are ashamed of me. I tried so hard to make you happy. There is but one thing more I can do for you. You will find in the safe a deed of gift for the 'Golden Hope.' I hope you will be very happy. You did love me a little, for a time, did you not, my husband? Goodbye."

And then at the end, the little servant, "Betty."

Slowly Lord Cecil placed the note in the pocket of his coat.

"I will find you my own, though it be at the ends of the earth, and shut you up in my heart," he whispered, "And as for whosoever has done this and the thought-habits of youth are not easily broken.

"You—your actions looked pretty bad, Monte," she said slowly. "I did not mean to be unjust, ever, but you had given me cause to distrust you. What is it you have to say now?"

"I know you are proud, Betty, but I want you to hear me out," Carson told her. He seemed to ponder what would be the least painful words, and then continued:

"He has gone to Cantlebury," the girl replied shortly. "What of it?"

"He has not gone to Cantlebury—he is with the Countess Larovich, as he is almost every day," Carson announced calmly. "It hasn't taken me many days to get a line on your nobleman. Not only is he ashamed of you, but he is making love to another woman."

Every sign of color drained slowly from Betty's face, and her soft lips closed in a hard line.

"Did I ever break my word, Monte?" she asked softly.

"You shure never did, Betty," Carson declared gravely.

"Then listen. If you have lied to me, I swear I will kill you as I would a rat. I must know the truth, now, and all of it."

"I'm plumb sorry, Betty," Carson said sympathetically. "I shure am, but there ain't no doubt. Come with me."

In silence they walked rapidly along a mile of hedge-walled lanes. Presently they drew near the small stream that was the boundary between Croftleigh and Ashley Grange, and Carson, drawing the girl into the shelter of a clump of shrubbery, pointed to the opposite bank. Strolling in lover-like converse were two figures, one the unmistakable figure of Lord Cecil, the other the Countess Larovich. Even as Betty watched with burning eyes, the woman paused and raised her face, and the man crushed her in his arms as he pressed his lips to hers.

Betty drew back without a word, and walked away. Carson, with a triumphant smile hurried after her.

"You won't want to stay, I reckon, Betty," he said as he overtook her. She did not raise her eyes, but nodded.

"No. I will go away," she said calmly.

"I knew you would. I'm going to look out for you, little girl. I reckon you don't want to see him before you go," Carson suggested.

"No, I do not wish to see him," she replied in the same lifeless voice, so unlike her own. "Please take me away now, Monte."

"All right, Betty, you can count on old Monte," he said soothingly. "Everything is fixed—I know you'd want to go. Just you slip into the house and get your things, and I'll meet you at the foot of the drive in half an hour, with a machine. Don't you care—he ain't worth it."

At the same moment the Countess Larovich was looking up archly into the eyes of a man whose clothing duplicated that worn by Lord Cecil that day and whose figure was identical. His face was carefully and expertly made up to a portrait-like reproduction of the features of the nobleman.

"Do you always put so much spirit into your acting, M. Devoeux?" the Countess laughed. "My lips are crushed! Not quite, as yet—"

The actor swore softly as Carson's hurried entrance interrupted the little scene.

"It's all fixed," Carson informed the Countess with savage satisfaction. "I'll take the machine and pick her up at the end of the drive, and if ever this staring fool sets eyes on her again, I hope to be shot for a Greaser!"

"You very probably will be shot for yourself if ever he sets eyes on you, my friend," the Countess commented, "so see to it that he doesn't!"

An hour later a motor was speeding swiftly toward Whitehaven. In it sat Betty, with pale, drawn face, and Mr. Monte Carson, on whose vindictive and greedy features was a grin of gratified triumph.

It was near the dinner hour when Lord Cecil returned from Cantlebury, where the matter of the poached game had been finally expounded, and with an eager light in his eyes hurried into the manor house. As he moved toward the stair, James came quietly forward and stopped him with a bow.

"Her Ladyship has gone out, my Lord," he said, and in the man's voice Cecil caught a troubled note. "She left a note in the library, my Lord."

With a vague sensation of impending disaster Cecil hurried to the dim old room and flipped open the envelope lying upon his writing table. His face grew white as his eyes flashed over the tear-dimmed page.

"Beloved," he read, and seemed to hear the soft caressing voice that was used to whisper the endearment in his ear. "I have gone away, and you will never see me again. I know that you love another, and that you are ashamed of me. I tried so hard to make you happy. There is but one thing more I can do for you. You will find in the safe a deed of gift for the 'Golden Hope.' I hope you will be very happy. You did love me a little, for a time, did you not, my husband? Goodbye."

And then at the end, the little servant, "Betty."

Slowly Lord Cecil placed the note in the pocket of his coat.

"I will find you my own, though it be at the ends of the earth, and shut you up in my heart," he whispered, "And as for whosoever has done this and the thought-habits of youth are not easily broken.

"You—your actions looked pretty bad, Monte," she said slowly. "I did not mean to be unjust, ever, but you had given me cause to distrust you. What is it you have to say now?"

"I know you are proud, Betty, but I want you to hear me out," Carson told her. He seemed to ponder what would be the least painful words, and then continued:

"Pretty soon after I got back to New York I met a man who knew all about Lord Cecil—and what I heard brought me back here as quiet as I could come. He hasn't played square with you, Betty, has he?"

Betty's eyes flashed fiercely.

"I will hear nothing against my husband," she said quietly.

"Where is he today?" Carson asked, with a sudden change of tone.

"He has gone to Cantlebury," the girl replied shortly. "What of it?"

"He has not gone to Cantlebury—he is with the Countess Larovich, as he is almost every day," Carson announced calmly. "It hasn't taken me many days to get a line on your nobleman. Not only is he ashamed of you, but he is making love to another woman."

DEMOCRATS TO DEAL OUT OFFICES BEFORE THE END

Concord, Dec. 2.—From all indications the Pellet administration in its closing and dying days, proposes to make political hay while the sun is still shining. From all reports a program is under way to start an "Indian summer" for a few of the faithful and get them in under cover before the Republican deluge, which starts in January 1st.

There are rumors that a wholesale raid on the public offices that still remain at the disposal of the governor and council, is being contemplated, and that an expensive program is to be carried out, providing that it does not meet with obstructions.

For some time past it has been known that Governor Pellet has been very desirous of naming State Treasurer George B. Farrand, also chairman of the Democratic state committee to the place of bank commissioner made vacant by the death of Richard M. Scammon of Stratham, which took place several weeks ago. It is said that there has been more or less opposition to Farrand, on the ground that he has not the necessary financial qualifications for the place. It is understood that the banking interests of the state have favored the naming of National Bank Examiner Norwin S. Bean of Manchester, an account of his experience and knowledge of the banking business. Not only the bankers, but it is also said that one or two members of the governor's council are of the opinion that politics should not be played in this appointment, and that it should go to a man who possesses the necessary qualifications for the place, regardless of his political faith. Mr. Bean is a Republican. Mr. Scammon, the late commissioner, was a most capable official, and not only the bank interests of the state, but the people themselves, who have their deposits in the same, have expressed a desire that the new commissioner should be a man who has demonstrated by experience that he is fitted, and the talk is that Mr. Bean is eminently qualified.

The place itself is a most attractive one. The salary is $3,000 per annum. It now seems to be the plan and purpose of Governor Pellet to put Farrand across, and it is stated that at the next meeting of the governor and council, or within a few days, possibly at a special meeting, his name will be presented.

Another attractive place that has been vacant since the 1st of June, 1913 or nearly a year and a half, is that of the public service commissioner, held by Prof. Thomas W. D. Worthen, Democrat, of Hanover. The salary for this position is also $3,000 per annum. It is said to be the present plan to try and give this place to Congressman Eugene B. Reed, who was defeated in November last for reelection. This appointment is for three years, and is considered a most desirable one.

In order to smooth the way to Reed's appointment there is said to be some regular Pellet fudging. It is stated that Arthur H. Chase who has held the position of state librarian since January 1, 1895, is to be dumped, and that this place is to go to Prof. Thomas W. D. Worthen as a sop to him and his friends for his removal from the public service commission.

But the state administration has struck a snag in its repeated attempt to pull off this program. The trustees of the state library are Lee C. Abbott of Manchester, George W. Stone of Andover, both Democrats, and William D. Chandler, Republican, of Concord. The time of Mr. Chandler has expired, and it is understood that Governor Pellet will not reappoint him. It is said that the governor is looking around to find some Republican who will help dispose Chase. It seems that George W. Stone of Andover, according to common report, has balked at this proposition, which makes it necessary to get a Republican who, in consideration of the appointment, will agree to carry out the wishes of the governor. This is said to be something of a task, and it is said the governor is finding it mighty hard sledding to get some one who will do his bidding in this respect.

Insurance Commissioner

Another Republican marked for slaughter is Insurance Commissioner Robert J. Merrill of Claremont, whose term expired Nov. 13, 1914. Mr. Merrill was appointed by Governor Stone and succeeded the late George H. Adams of Plymouth. He is said to have made a most competent examiner, and that even talk of his removal has aroused much adverse criticism among insurance people throughout the state.

It is said to be the present plan to give this place to the Hon. Joseph H. Warren of Rochester, a lifelong political friend of the Governor, and who has been used as a football by the administration ever since it was inaugurated. Warren was promised a place on the license commission, but was turned down at the last moment. He has been frequently mentioned for the vacancy on the public service commission, but the governor was never able to get him across. He has been named for other places, only to be left out in the cold, but it is now said that the governor is in earnest to give him this political reward, and that Merrill is marked for slaughter.

These are among the big features which are said to be under contemplation, and the next meeting of the governor and council, which will be held on Friday of this week, will be watched with great public interest.

NO PROSECUTION ON WAR REVENUE THIS MONTH

Washington, Dec. 3.—Internal revenue collectors throughout the country had notice today from the Internal Revenue Bureau here that the Government does not intend to prosecute anyone subject to the war revenue law who shows a willingness and readiness to buy the new tax stamps.

The notice was sent to delay fears on the part of thousands of persons all over the country who, yesterday, besieged the Internal Revenue offices in attempts to obtain revenue stamps to comply with the law, and who because of their inability to do so became frightened over what might happen in the event they were not on the minute with their stamping.

There was no need for such fears, and this was made clear in a telegram which Commissioner Osborn of the Internal Revenue Bureau sent to all collectors.

The telegram was in response to frantic calls from collectors, who told of crowds rushing to their offices, demanding stamps. It was hoped by officials today that the notice would relieve a situation which gave indications of causing embarrassment to thousands of persons, and which also might have resulted in considerable confusion to railroads and shippers.

The telegram is as follows:

"Date all special tax returns Nov. 30 until you are able to handle applications promptly unless you have information that no effort was made to file same prior to that date. If unable to supply demands for documentary stamps for bills of lading permit applicants to go forward; have record kept and affix or cancel stamps when received. Notify railroads.

Officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau here explain that while every thing possible had been done to get ready to enforce the law they have been hampered in their work because of the failure of Congress to appropriate additional money for that purpose. While the stamps have been shipped away as fast as they could be turned out by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing failure of some collectors to heed suggestions from Washington that all applicants be given supplies sufficient to last a few days and not be permitted to have large quantities, had complicated the situation.

TALKS ON THRIFT

No 48—Teaching Boys to Save. "Always all teach the children to save—economy is the sure foundation for all virtues."—Victor Hugo.

"The boy is father to the man and much can be made of him if caught young enough."

Many a successful man says he got his start by saving and that it was the early lessons of thrift at home that made him a saver.

Professor William A. McKeever has given a lot of time to the study and investigation of the methods of training boys in this important particular. The Kansas State Agricultural College has published some of the conclusions in the form of bulletins from which the following is an extract:

"It is often the case, especially among farmers, that the growing boy never sees any money of his own, excepting on rare occasions, like Christmas and the Fourth of July, and then he regards his shining quarter as an object of curiosity and scarcely knows how to spend it. Often in a case like this it is found that the father is looking upon his son as a kind of investment to be made as profitable as possible. The boy's time belongs to me. I am at considerable expense for his board and clothes and winter schooling, and I have a right to require him to do all he can in return. I had very little spending money during my boyhood. This is in substance, the sentiment expressed by a prosperous farmer. The boy was being exploited for the sake of the farm and not the farm for the sake of the boy, as the case should have been."

"I never gave one of my boys a cent," said another father who was successful in this home training. From childhood under my guidance, they always earned all they got and thus learned to know the value of it. 'My fifteen year old boy is a spendthrift,' said another. 'I simply is not in him to save, although I have been trying for three years to teach him this lesson.' Inquiry into this case brought out the fact that up to his twelfth year this boy had been thoroughly indulged in all the habits of the spendthrift."

After he has been taught to earn money, it is all important that the boy be instructed carefully in the matter of saving. The evidence goes to show that a bank or trust company furnishes the most common and satisfactory means of saving. The regulations of these institutions to the boy depositor is always one of helpfulness and encouragement. It matters not how little the lad may be earning, so that he saves a portion of it. Give him a top bank at first and as soon as he has accumulated a dollar or more have it placed to his credit in a bank of deposit. Develop his interest in the matter by talking to him and by taking him to the bank with you, where he may see the papers made out."

Try to develop in the young financier's mind some reasonable purpose for which this money is being saved and lead him by degrees to have fond anticipations of its final use. Have the boy's savings deposited in an institution that allows interests on such accounts, explaining to him just how money grows when bearing interest and how compound interest is interest on interest.—T. D. MacGregor.

Don't Be a "Sniper."

Since the beginning of the Mexican war we have heard considerable about "sniping," and there may have been cases of this miserable practice in Europe, though, to the credit of the nations at war there, it is to be said that not much of this dirty work can be charged up to them. An exchange defines the term as follows:

The word "sniper" is the modern picturesque equivalent for the old franc-tireur, or free shooter. The term denotes the civilian who, having neither distinctive uniform nor any connection with a regular military organization, takes a pot shot at the invader of his country.

That this is a low-lived and despicable form of warfare all must admit, and yet it is more justifiable than the "sniping" that is constantly in progress in civil life. The person who, though not connected with a military organization, shoots an invader of his country may feel that while his work is not according to the rules of war he is yet performing a service to his country that is to be justified by circumstances.

But if the "sniper" who operates in a time of excitement, confusion and danger, taking the most serious personal risk in so doing, is to be despised, what shall be said of the civilian who makes a practice of "sniping" his town and the men who are trying to build it up? That every city and town in the land has such men, and too many of them, all know. These "snipers," for the term is none too harsh for them, lose no opportunity to comment and criticize in a manner highly injurious to their towns and to minimize the efforts of the men and women who are doing their best to build up the community and advance its interests along all lines.

The workers and boosters in every community know this to be true, but few realize the extent of the damage done by the idle and unkind words of these detractors. The people of a town know what the conditions are, regardless of the vapors of the "snipers," but with strangers it is different, and any man who deliberately utters an expression derogatory to his town and those who are striving earnestly for its welfare is in reality as detestable as the man who from behind the shelter of the plain citizen makes war on men brave enough to face the fortunes of war.

The lesson is obvious and should be taken to heart by every man who has ever been guilty of this practice. If you can't be a booster, for heaven's sake don't be a "sniper."

Secretary Daniels informs the naval training station at Newport, R. I., that the song, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," which is a marching song of the British forces, is as much out of place among American sailors and soldiers as the "Marseillaise" or "The Watch on the Rhine," and must therefore be discarded in conformity to the strict neutrality which this country is endeavoring to maintain. This may seem like a small point, but in a time like the present it is well to pay some attention to appearances.

Louder and louder becomes the cry for centralization and paternalism. A public speaker a few days ago urged that the Federal government should take over the life insurance business in order to cut down the big salaries and save expenses for the benefit of the insured. But it is to be noticed that the government pays pretty fair salaries to the men in its service, and that it requires rather more men to do a given work than does the average corporation.

Speaker Champ Clark of the House of Representatives says this country is on the eve of an era of great prosperity and that the "pot house" politicians can't stop it. It is fortunate that the great majority of the intelligent men of the country are able to accept Mr. Clark's view in its entirety.

The teaching and preaching of morality can hardly be expected to have the force they should so long as the social leaders of the country divorce as freely as they do and marry so soon after the divorces are granted.

November afforded no ground for complaint at the finish.

War taxes are not pleasant, but they are preferable to war.

This map shows points in the English channel which figure in the news of the war, particularly with reference to recent naval events. B shows the support of Havre on the coast of France, where two English merchant vessels were torpedoed by a German submarine. C shows Zeebrugge, Belgium, a German submarine base, which was shelled by English warships.

BOSTON LETTER

Boston, Dec. 3.—Governor Walsh in his address before one hundred members of the Massachusetts Federation of Progressive Women declared that the government owed the citizens commercial and industrial prosperity. He said this was an important debt of the government to the individual, ranking next in importance to the duty of providing for health and education. "The first and foremost duty of the government," he said, "is to concern itself with everything that pertains to the promotion and advancement of the welfare and health of all the people of the commonwealth. As for what the citizen owes the government, Governor Walsh declared that it was our individual duty "to give the country our best hearts, our best souls and our best minds." It is a shame," he declared "that tens of thousands of men, yes hundreds of thousands of men, refused to serve their country with their consciences, who refused to use their right to vote one day in the year. Such men I consider worse than deserters from the army and navy, for in the case of the deserters, a poor fellow may run away on the spur of the moment."

Boston, Dec. 3.—The total expense of eradicating the foot and mouth disease from Massachusetts live stock is estimated at $150,000 by Commissioner F. E. Walker of the Department of Animal Industry. About $110,000 to be paid for animals slaughtered and $40,000 for disinfection, etc. The Federal government will pay 50 per cent of the cost and Commissioner Walker ask the legislature to appropriate $75,000 to defray the remainder. It is estimated that it will be necessary to slaughter 1900 animals and 2000 fowl before the disease is completely stamped out. The last minor outbreak necessitated the killing of 1830 cattle. Thirty nine heads have been infected in Massachusetts thus far, and thirty of these are already under ground.

Boston, Dec. 3.—Although immigration at this port has fallen off since Thursday, December 3, and 10. The European war started commerce shows a gain according to statistics made public by Statistician Quinn of the U. S. Immigration Bureau in this city. Last month seven more steamers arrived at this port than during the corresponding month in 1913. During November 1914, 65 passenger steamers from foreign lands, 20 schooners and one barkentine arrived, of which 55 were British, 8 Danish, 4 Swedish, 10 Norwegian, 2 Dutch and 12 American. Passenger traffic for 1914 shows a heavy decrease over the corresponding month for the previous year. Last month 275 first class, 656 second and 1244 steerage passengers landed, and there were three slowways and 75 cattlemen, making a total of 2262 for the month. Of that number 1753 were aliens. For the month of November, 1913, the figures show that there were 2187 arrivals of which 255 were first class, 1570 second class, 4357 steerage, 18 slowways, and two cattlemen. Of the total for that month, 5461 were aliens.

Boston, Dec. 3.—The Workmen's Compensation Act does not deprive the parents of a minor of the right to maintain an independent action for loss of services, and medical expenses, even though the injured party has received compensation and medical expenses from the firm where such persons were employed. This is contained in a decision of the full bench of the supreme judicial court relating to the case of Philamene King against the Viscolod Company of Leominster. Alfred King, 16, was injured while in the employ of the defendant company, the latter was insured in the Massachusetts Employees' Insurance Association, which paid the boy one half of his wages for eleven weeks, while he was unable to work, and also paid all medical and hospital bills. Judge Hall in the trial, ordered a verdict for the defendant. The exceptions of the plaintiff went to the full court with a stipulation that if the plaintiff were entitled to maintain her action she should be paid the sum of $84.50.

LOOK THROUGH THE MERCHANT'S EYES

If the manufacturer who seeks a market for his product will look through the eyes of the retailer his advertising course will be clear. When the retailer advertises he uses the newspapers of his home city—because they bring him business. It is over the counter of this same retailer that the manufacturer must look for his sales. If his advertising is in the newspapers, he and the retailer are doing the kind of "team work" that will bring greatly increased business. Manufacturers with advertising problems are invited to address the Bureau of Advertising, American Newspaper Publishers Association, World Building, New York.

CURRENT OPINION

DISARMAMENT SOLUTION OF THE PRESENT CONDITIONS

If the spirit of the modern war is to be taken up generally the United States must make up its mind to the fact that we have no life insurance policy to insure us against future trouble.

Now let us suppose that at the end of this conflict Great Britain is crushed and dismembered and Austria, let us say, comes over to take Canada. For the sake of ourselves and our children we must not disguise the fact that Austria wouldn't hesitate for a moment to send its forces through the United States to take the Dominion. We have a splendid arm of defense in our navy, but that is not of much use in event of its defeat. The defense would then be inadequately left to our small regular army and militia.

There will be no protection and no solution to present conditions until there is a world agreement to disarmament, with its provisions enforced by international police.—By Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, Harvard University.

ELECT OFFICERS.

East Rockingham Pomona Grange Meets at Exeter.

East Rockingham Pomona Grange held its annual meeting on Wednesday at Exeter with Gilman Grange, about 150 attending. Benjamin E. Pray of Stratham, was elected master for the ensuing term. A memorial service was held for the six members who died during the year.

The program at the public afternoon session comprised an essay, "District Schools," by Mrs. A. Gertrude Sargent of Exeter; paper, "How Can the Grange Aid the Rural School?" by Mrs. Alvin E. Pass of Exeter; readings, by Mrs. Lillian W. Rowe, of Exeter; violin solo, by W. B. Stevens, Jr., an academy student, and vocal solos, by Miss Bertha Dearborn of Exeter.

Worth Getting

The navy department has requested that Mare Island yard submit a bid on the building of the two 4,000-ton gun turrets.

The great tanks will be built of structural steel, will be 30 feet high, and 100 feet in diameter, and their estimated cost is in excess of $100,000 each.

Electrical Workers Called

Four wiremen and five electricians helpers were called in the machinery division today.

Sailing Date Changed

The department is said to have again changed the sailing date of the cruiser Washington at Philadelphia and the ship will not leave League Island yard before December 10.

TO BELGIUM

Great hearted Belgium! Belgium weeps for you; But like a mother, smiling through her tears, Glad that her son in his first manhood years, Has borne himself as she would wish him to do.

So long ago, the Tyrol patriot drew (Scorning as you have scorned all craven fears) Into one loyal heart six Austrian spears, And by that splendid gun let freedom through! Shall England; mother of the free, forget? Oh, let her rather sink beneath her seas!

Take you this promise Belgium—arm who set This cup to your brave lips her hands shall seize, And he shall pay in blood and tears, the debt And drain a bitter chalice to the less! —E. W. Bliss in the London Daily Chronicle.

GOVERNOR'S BALL TO BE HELD JAN. 7

Brilliant Event Is Set for Evening of Inauguration Day.

Concord, N. H., Dec. 2.—Another innovation is to be made by Governor-elect Rolland H. Spaulding in line with his early announcement of his staff recently. The governor's ball and the reception by the governor, when he customarily comes in February, will take place on the day of the governor-elect's inauguration, January 7. Immediately after the inauguration exercises the reception will be held in the governor and council chamber. The ball will be in the evening at the auditoria mand state armory.

In this way all the time honored and social functions will be disposed of in one day. It will make a rather long day lasting from noon on Thursday to well into Friday morning.

A meeting was held yesterday afternoon to appoint the committees for the affair. Robert Jackson who served in a similar capacity two years ago, is chairman of the executive committee. General William P. Thayer was named treasurer, and Major Arthur H. Chase secretary. The other members include: Chairman George H. Moses of the reception committee, Allen Hollis of the invitation committee, Arthur E. Dole of the ticket committee, Colonel Harley B. Robey of the hall committee, William D. Chandler of the printing committee, Oliver J. Peiren of the supper committee, Herbert W. O'Brien of the music committee, Harlan C. Pearson of the press committee, and Ralph L. Lannon of the transportation committee. Arthur P. Merrill, General Herbert E. Tuthery, Major Charles E. Tilton, State Treasurer George E. Parrand, John B. Jameson, Dr. F. A. Stillings, Edward K. Woodworth and General Harry H. Dudley.

Edward K. Woodworth is to be

NEWINGTON

The schools which closed on Wednesday for the Thanksgiving recess, have re-opened this week.

Several persons enjoyed a sleigh ride on November 21, 22 and 23.

Miss Della Cole of Cambridge, passed Thanksgiving with relatives in town.

Mr. Herbert Pickering and wife were the Thanksgiving guests of Mr. Pickering's father, Mr. Luther Pickering.

Mr. William Lefavor and family of Manchester, Mass., and Mr. Henry Randall and family of Rye helped to make up a family gathering on Thanksgiving Day at Mr. and Mrs. Justin Rand's.

Mr. Jackson Hoyt who passed the holiday in Boston and vicinity returned home on Monday.

Mrs. William Furber and daughter Dorothy have returned after passing the week-end in Portsmouth.

The whist party which was held in the Town Hall last Wednesday evening was well attended. Mrs. Carlin of Portsmouth won the ladies' prize and Mr. Shaw the gents. After intermission, Mrs. Seymour presided at the piano and the young people danced until the hour of midnight warned them that it was time to adjourn.

The many friends of Mrs. Anne S. Arink will be pleased to know that she is recovering from her recent illness.

Mr. and Mrs. George Marston of Everett, Mass., have returned home after passing a few weeks with their aunt, Miss Hattie Pickering.

Rev. Mr. Berkley was out of town on Sunday and services were held in the afternoon by Rev. Mr. Cross of Dover.

Mrs. Darus Frink and the Misses, Abbie and May Frink were visitors in Haverhill on Friday.

The Reapers' Society will give a fair in the town hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 10. The booths will contain a variety of fancy and useful articles. Candy and refreshments will also be for sale. A very pleasing program is being prepared for the occasion. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance and that the pocket-books will be well supplied with the means to purchase generously of the various articles on sale. The Reapers' will use the money obtained in many helpful and needful ways.

WILL BE USED AS A STORE HOUSE

The up-river plant of the Eastern Oil and Rendering Company will be used as a store house for the products of the company in this section, upon the removal of the firm from this city, which will be in about two months.

The Girls' Guild of the Middle street Baptist church met in the Guild room on Wednesday evening. The rehearsal of the entertainment to be presented on Wednesday evening was held.

In spite of the weather Wednesday evening there was a very large audience at the Second Christian church to hear Evangelist Reuben S. Smith, who delivered a very forceful and heart searching message on "Consecration." Mr. Smith makes a straight and manly appeal, without any peculiar demonstration or excitement. There is nothing mystical or far fetching in his methods. Everyone will have the most charitable and loving consideration from him. He is of the opinion that nothing should be resorted to that can not be sustained at each and every service of the Church during the entire year. There is a keen interest manifested all through the congregation, and an awakening to the serious and religious things of life is being felt. A commendable feature of the meetings is the chorus, which is led by Mr. Elbrook. They do sing, and it is inspiring. Tonight Mr. Smith will speak again at 7.30 o'clock, preceded by a song service. Come and bring your friends.

St. Aspinquid Tribe of Red Men will meet this evening in Grange hall.

On Friday afternoon the P. M. Club of Portsmouth will meet with Mrs. William J. Blake of Kittery Depot.

Among the 300 entries for the Portsmouth Poultry Show are many from Kittery, but there is still time to send in your entry if you haven't done so. One of the premiums offered is a beautiful silver cup, by Mr. Charles Husey of the Intervene.

Mrs. George Marden of Plerson street on Wednesday entertained Mrs. William Seaward and Miss Grace of Exeter.

Another large and merry crowd attended the second night of the River-side Association fair, at Wentworth hall, Wednesday evening. The attractive displays at the various booths continued to catch the eye and the dimes. Tonight is the closing night of the fair and another large, if not larger, crowd will turn out in full force. The entertainment Wednesday evening was furnished by Miss Margaret Pearson, soloist, of Portsmouth, and Sanders' orchestra of six pieces. Miss Pearson is always good, and last evening was no exception. Her rendition of "When You're a Long, Long Way From Home" was exceptionally pleasing. Sanders' orchestra is composed of the best musicians in this vicinity, and they gave a very fine program, as follows:

CROWN PRINCE IN SUPREME COMMAND

Takes Charge of Campaign Against French and English Lines--Berlin Claims German Advance

Paris, Dec. 3.—It is reported here that the crown prince, Frederick William, is to transfer his headquarters from the 5th army in the Argonne to Belgium, and may be given supreme command of the German army of the west. The German forces are about to make one more effort to pierce the allied lines, and reach Calais, as soon as the fighting in the east reaches a decision.

The German artillery is today hammering at the allied line between Ypres and Arras. Reports reaching here state that re-enforcements continued to come up for the enemy in this section, and the full quota of 100,000 additional men is expected to be on the firing line within the next few days.

French Successes Claimed in Statement.

Paris, Dec. 3.—The French war office gave out an official announcement in Paris this afternoon, as follows:

"In the region to the south of Ypres and St. Eloy an attack of the enemy against an entrenchment taken by our troops during the day was repulsed by us. Our artillery inflicted damage on a group of three batteries of heavy artillery of the enemy.

"At Vermelles the château and the park surrounding it, two houses in the village and some trenches were brilliantly occupied by our forces.

"There has been a spirited artillery exchange in the vicinity of Fay, to the southwest of Peronne.

"In the region between Vendresse and Craonne there has been a violent bombardment to which the French artillery replied with success, accomplishing the destruction of a battery.

"In the Argonne a German attack against Fontaine Madame was repulsed, and we made some progress in the occupation of a trench in the forest of Courtes Chaussees, and a minor fortified position near St. Hubert.

"On the heights of the Meuse, in the Woevre district, and in the Vosges there is nothing to report."

Says "Kaiser's Own" Took Position from French

Berlin (by wireless to London) Dec. 3.—The German official statement issued today claims the capture of a strong French position in the Argonne forest by Emperor William's own regiment.

The text of the communication reads:

"In the western theatre of the war the enemy made insignificant advances which were checked.

"In the forest of Argonne a strong point of support of the enemy was taken by the Württemberg Infantry regiment 120, His Majesty the Kaiser's own regiment. On this occasion two officers and about 300 of the enemy's troops were made prisoners.

"There is no news from eastern Prussia.

"In northern Poland the battles are taking their normal course.

"In southern Poland the enemy's attacks were repulsed.

"The report circulated in the foreign press that the 23,000 prisoners taken by us at Kutno are included in the 40,000 Russian prisoners reported by us previously in untrue.

"In the battles at Wloclawek, Kutno, Lodz, and Lowicz the eastern army has taken between Nov. 31 and Dec. 1 over 80,000 unwounded Russian prisoners."

Sea Fight Near Zeppelins May Back Up Fleet.

London, Dec. 2.—Germany's naval activity is again arousing anticipation of a sea fight, in which it is hoped Great Britain's losses of the past will be avenged.

An unconfirmed report declares many of the German ships at Kiel have left for the North sea. At Zebruggen, in Belgium, the greatest activity continues. It has been learned that not only have at least six submarines been constructed there, but several destroyers are in the harbor.

It is believed the Kaiser expects to direct a fierce attack from beneath the water and from the air in any engagement with the British.

GUY BATES POST IN "OMAR, THE TENTMAKER"

The most spectacular attraction in several seasons is now playing at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, where Guy Bates Post is appearing in the title role of Richard Walton Tully's illustrious Persian romance "Omar, the Tentmaker."

Mr. Tully is a native of California and is universally recognized as one of the foremost dramatists in America, and in his latest work he has surpassed his previous successes "The Bird of Paradise," and "The Rose of the Rancho," both of which are pleasurable recalled by all theatregoers. For a number of seasons Mr. Post has been regarded as one of the foremost dramatic artists of the stage and it has remained for his splendid impersonation of the beloved Persian poet to entrench him definitely as the most interesting figure in romantic roles since the passing of Richard Mansfield. Scenically, the equipment for "Omar, the Tentmaker," is so massive and elaborate that only the largest stages in America will accommodate the succession of huge settings which are a conspicuous feature of the attraction. It is doubtful if the alluring and picturesque atmosphere of the Orient has ever been so faithfully reproduced upon the stage as in "Omar, the Tentmaker."

This lavish stage adornment is the achievement of Mr. Tully himself, in association with Wilfred Buckland, who for ten years served as art director for Weylin Helason.

Special attention is called to the gorgeous matinees Wednesday and Saturday, when good seats can be obtained for $1.00.

LIVING ON SIX DOLLARS A WEEK

New York, Dec. 2.—"How Girls Live on $6 a Week." Under this caption there was read today in the record of the Factory Investigating Commission's Investigating Commission first-hand details of the fight for existence which the Commission's investigators say is being waged daily by tens of thousands of underpaid women and girls in New York state.

Miss Esther Packard, assistant secretary of the Consumers' League, testified as to the results of her personal investigation. She cited many instances, among them the following:

Miss C. W.—When I have to pay for shoes or anything like that I don't buy meat for weeks at a time.

P. M.—I never eat any breakfast at all; I found that was the easiest meal to do without.

Miss T.—I generally buy beans for three cents and bread for two cents for lunch; I seldom pay more than seven cents.

One girl, Miss Packard said, lives on one meal a day when she has to pay for shoes or a hat. Many girls frankly admitted that they counted on their male friends to buy their Sunday dinners. A girl of twenty-three had taken no vacation for six years because she could not afford to lose her salary for a week. A woman of forty, without a vacation for twenty-five years, cannot think of stopping work for a month to take a rest which she needs. A girl of twenty-two who became ill last summer explained her illness, according to the witness, as follows:

"The only thing I can economize on is food. Fifteen or twenty cents is the most I ever pay for lunch or dinner. I get so tired of those twenty-cent dinners year in and year out that often I think I'd rather not eat at all."

REMOVAL NOTICE.

After Nov. 30, Carl & Co's teaming office and stable will be at the corner of High and Deer streets. We solicit a continuance of our old patronage as well as new business. CARL & CO.

RUSSIANS NOW COMMAND VISTULA

Petrograd, Dec. 2.—The Russians have driven back the Germans along the Vistula, and now hold Plock in force. The information reached here today in unofficial dispatches from the front, telling of the terrific fighting in Poland.

Plock is 50 miles northwest of Warsaw on the Vistula. It was there that the first determined fighting occurred in the German advance upon Warsaw from Thorn. The Russians were driven back, but were last reported to have recovered ground to Gumbin, 10 miles south of Plock, and have now occupied that position itself.

It is now admitted that in the vicinity of Lodz and Lowicz the Germans have succeeded in cutting their way out of the trap which had been laid for them. This was only accomplished, however, with terrible loss.

By holding Plock the Russians control the Vistula, which has been serving as an important line of communication for the Germans; it is declared here. Several barges loaded with supplies and ammunition have already been captured.

The Russian troops are declared to be withstanding the hardships of the winter campaigning better than the Germans. All prisoners declare they have endured terrible suffering. Many have frozen feet and hands. Supply trains have been wrecked and there is a shortage of warm clothing for the army.

The casualties admitted by the Russians today in fighting up to Nov. 2 include 972 officers killed, 19,503 wounded and 3679 missing.

Lavish Supplies to German Armies Blocked.

London, Dec. 2.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Post sends the following:

"Special significance attaches to the capture by the Russians of ammunition barges on the Vistula, near Plock, inasmuch as the Germans are relying mainly upon the Vistula for securing easy communication to their armies in Poland.

Lavish supplies of ammunition have been kept up by barges which, starting from Danzig, Elbing-Grande, Thorn and other points easily reached by the German railways have brought supplies to the heart of the German positions in Poland. The capture of the barges is thus a step in cutting communication.

Austria Claims Capture of 19,000 Russians, 33 Guns.

Vienna, via Berlin and London, Dec. 2.—Since beginning their last offensive on their southern front, the Russians have lost 10,000 prisoners, 47 machine guns and 48 cannon, an official statement issued here today asserts.

"The Przemyśl garrison has repulsed an attack upon the northern positions from the fortress," it is declared.

"The Carpathian battle continues. The Russians who have been stubbornly resisting for the last few days east of the Kolubara have been defeated along the entire line and are in retreat. The enemy suffered considerable losses, 800 unburied dead being

"Europe is Not Ready for Peace Yet"

Washington, Dec. 2.—Henry White, former Ambassador to France, who recently returned from Germany, discussed the European situation today with President Wilson.

"Europe is not ready for peace yet," said Mr. White. "There is not the slightest chance at present of getting a hearing for suggestions of peace. That time will come later and then it will be time for the United States to act."

Proposal to Create Neutral Zone in America.

Business Atmosphere at Russian Headquarters.

Petrograd, Dec. 2.—"What I saw at the headquarters of the Russian commander-in-chief, the Grand Duke Nicholas, would convince a blind man that Russia has made great strides in 10 years," writes a correspondent of the Russkoe Slovo. "At headquarters there is not a single individual who is not absolutely necessary for the work to be done. The silence of a monastery reigns there and you can distinctly hear the pulse-beats of the army. Work begins in the early morning frequently before daybreak.

ALUMNI DESIRES RECOGNITION

Proposes That Nomination of Five Trustees of Dartmouth Shall Be Made by Council.

The Alumni council of Dartmouth College representing Dartmouth alumni from all parts of the country recently met at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia for its second annual meeting. Eighteen of the 25 members were present, the one traveling farthest having come from North Dakota. There was a heavy representation from New England, as well as from Chicago, Minneapolis, New York and Washington.

The session was occupied with the discussion of the relation of the alumni to the internal affairs of the college, the consideration of which was led by Henry L. Moore '29, of Minneapolis and Professor E. J. Bartlett '71, of the Dartmouth College faculty. At the request of the faculty committee in charge of undergraduate organizations, not athletes of the college it was voted that the council should take steps toward securing alumni representation on this committee.

This action is an important one in that it indicates recognition on the part of Dartmouth alumni that the musical, dramatic and literary organizations of the college deserve as much attention from and recognition by the alumni as do the various athletic interests.

The council was further addressed by the Hon. Frank Streeter '74, of Concord, representing the board of trustees. General Streeter took an advanced ground with regard to the powers of the alumni in relation to college government. He expressed the conviction that more and more American colleges must cease to be controlled by self-perpetuating boards but must be governed democratically through men who represent the living enthusiasm and unselfish desire for service on the part of the alumni.

General Streeter's remarks are available as carrying somewhat further the established Dartmouth policy. The trustees of the Dartmouth College constitute a small body, twelve men only. Originally self-perpetuating, by virtue of the royal charter of 1769 Dartmouth trustees have already relinquished to the alumni the right to

Portsmouth Has to Bow to the Inevitable—Scores of Citizens Prove It

After reading the public statement of this representative citizen of Portsmouth given below, you must come to this conclusion: A remedy which proved so beneficial years ago with the kidneys can naturally be supposed to do the same work in similar cases. Read this:

George Byers, 172 Gates street, Portsmouth, says: "My kidneys became disordered some years ago and I suffered from pain and lameness in my back. The kidney secretions were too frequent in passage and at night I was obliged to get up several times, but was unable to find relief until I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Philbrick's Drug Store. They brought the most satisfactory results. After I had finished two boxes, the trouble had left."

eleven out of the whole body of twelve. In order to strengthen the hands of the council it has now been proposed that the nomination of candidates for these five trusteeships shall be placed in the hands of the council. The matter received some consideration on the part of the council at the present meeting and will be referred to the alumni for final action in June.

The Alumni Council is preparing to institute an alumni fund for the purpose of meeting the immediate needs of the college. Plans for this were discussed at some length and means of conducting the campaign for subscriptions were examined. It was voted that the secretary should attempt as many as possible of the alumni meetings in various cities during the coming winter, with a view of explaining the purposes of the fund and the relation of the council to its administration.

TO DEDICATE NEW COLLEGE BUILDING

New Hampshire College, Durham, N. H., Dec. 2.—The new science building at New Hampshire College, just completed at a cost of $80,000 will be formally dedicated and opened for public inspection December 16. Invitations to attend the exercises are being sent to Governor Folger, to the governor-elect, Rolland H. Spaulding and to various prominent citizens of the state, including all resident manufacturers or the representatives of non-resident factory owners.

The new building, named DeMerritt Hall, in honor of Albert DeMerritt of Durham, who died last year and who for many years was greatly interested in the college and served in the state legislature from Durham, houses the departments of electrical and mechanical engineering, physics and drawing. It is the most completely equipped building of its sort in the state and is one of the best in New England. The average citizen, long aware of the importance of the agricultural courses at New Hampshire College, is not so well acquainted with the serious and important work being done for the young men of the state in engineering here, and at the dedication of this new building President E. T. Fairchild will make formal announcement of one of the most important steps the college has ever taken. Its decision to parallel its remarkably successful two-year course in agriculture with a similar two-year course in engineering.

The two-year course in agriculture is open to young men who are unable to spend four years in college, but who desire a knowledge of scientific agriculture. The admission requirements are slight. The candidate must be at least eighteen years of age and have a good common school education. Graduates from this course have in most cases returned to their farms, made good farmers, have become men of influence in their communities, and leaders in all branches of agricultural activity. So intensely practical, and in consequence so valuable, has the course become that the number of students has increased steadily and the graduates have been of the greatest service to the state in raising the standard of its farms.

President Fairchild, who believes that the college is for the people of New Hampshire and that its great first duty is to do the greatest good to the greatest number of these people, has in the recently established department of home economics met the demand of the women of New Hampshire, and now in the two-year course in engineering purposes to do for the inhabitants of the mill towns of New Hampshire what the college has long done for the inhabitants of its rural sections. Not only does he intend to help the coming men with this two-year course, but he expects eventually to carry on all over the state an extension service which will do for the factory worker and the factory owner what the present agricultural extension service is doing for the New Hampshire farmer.

There are thousands of men in the great factories of Manchester, Nashua, Newmarket, Dover, Rochester, Somersworth and other cities, whom New Hampshire College can help. There are thousands of young men there who will go into the mills this year and every year, and New Hampshire College will strive, beginning with the opening of college next fall, to give as many of them as will come to Durham an equipment which will fit them for better, more intelligent work, and which will make progress for them more rapid and more certain, and benefit also the manufacturer, in their greater efficiency.

The college will begin its work next September, and the details of the new course now being planned will be announced later. It is safe to say that it will be open to the young men who can profit by it at practically their own terms, and they will not be barred by the necessity of passing difficult examinations or the payment of high fees. The education that they want will be theirs at as near cost price as is possible.

President Fairchild feels sure of the hearty co-operation of the great mill and factory owners and the proprietors of all sorts of industrial enterprises in the state, and he hopes as many of these men as possible will be in Durham, December 16, to inspect the plant here and to give the college the benefit of their advice in this undertaking.

The invited guests will inspect the college buildings, will be guests at a luncheon, will probably attend chapel, and after an address by President Fairchild, will be invited to take part in a discussion of the new course and suggest ways to insure the accomplishment of its purpose.

President E. T. Fairchild has invited the Stratford county delegation to the next legislature to visit the college, December 9, and spend the day in an inspection of the buildings and grounds.

It is hoped that all can be present and it is especially the desire of the president that all of the delegation who are not acquainted with the state school here and the work it is doing may find an opportunity on that date to come to Durham.

The visitors will be taken over the entire plant and there will be guides present to answer all questions. Luncheon will be served and there will be a short talk by the president. It is probable also that the visitors will visit chapel and see the students there.

MEDY SCORES A BIG HIT

Polish and Perlmutter, one of the best comedies seen here for many a year, made a hit with a large audience at the Portsmouth Theatre on Wednesday evening.

It is one of A. H. Wood's productions and the company and stage furnishing were both excellent. In fact, it would be hard to improve on the leading members of the cast. It is a Jewish comedy, with practically all the characters of that nationality.

There is a good plot and the comedy is intermingled with a pretty romance.

The two stars of the play are Lew Welch as Mawruss Perlmutter and Jules Jordan as Abe Polish, two Jewish clothing dealers, who have by hard work worked up to a big company of garment makers with the aid of a clever designer. Rudy Goldman, most ably presented by June Pearley. Their bookkeeper, Boris Andrieff (David Leonard), is arrested for a crime in Russia, and the partners stand back of him and put up $20,000 bail. Thinking that he would be safe in Canada, and believing that the case against him would not be called, Polish sends him away. The case is called and his failure to appear causes the forfeit of the $20,000 bail and the firm is threatened with bankruptcy, but the ending is good. Boris returns in time to save the bail and prove his innocence.

Another member of the cast worthy of special mention was Katherine DeBarry as Mrs. Polish. Robert Scott as Mark Polishsky a buyer was also good. The cast:

NEW HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE NOTES

The students in the home economics classes gave a candy sale here this afternoon, the proceeds to go as a contribution from New Hampshire College to the Ellen H. Richards memorial fund.

Ellen H. Richards, formerly of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, was one of the pioneers in the home economics movement in the United States. The memorial fund is now being used for the maintenance of a bureau of information on home economics and it is the plan that in time this information bureau shall develop into a bureau for the carrying on of research work in home economics. The information bureau now has headquarters in Boston.

Lewis MacBryne, editor of the Lowell Courier-Citizen, addressed the students at chapel yesterday on publicity.

He told his hearers to go back to their home towns upon graduation and insist that the successful farmer do the advertising instead of allowing the mediocre to give the town its ranking in the public mind.

Mr. MacBryne cited instance after instance to show how small publically campaigns can be used to create markets and turn crops that might have been failures into great successes. "You can make the city man buy a lawn-mower when he wanted to buy a tooth brush if you give the right sort of publicity to your lawn mower."

There are 20 candidates out for the basket ball team, which will be coached this year by Carl A. Reed of Palmer, Mass.

The first game of the season will be played in the college gymnasium, Monday, December 7, with a team from Hudson, Mass.

Mr. Reed has been in basket ball for fourteen years and has met with great success.

KEEPING CHRISTMAS

To keep Christmas this year should be considered a duty as well as a privilege. The Spirit of Christmas needs expression and no one is excused from doing what they can to broaden the interest in the larger brotherhood through the Christmas Cheer. The giving of gifts is a small part of keeping Christmas, it is quite as necessary to receive with thankfulness and to withhold our giving of presents where it is best. Our giving should not be marred by anxious care, lack of kindness or patience. Make this Christmas Season a happy one for yourselves and others by taking advantage of the first opportunity to make your selections. And may every gift "Feed Three."

LADIES AID OF METHODIST CHURCH HOLD "A CALENDAR"

Twelve Prettily Decorated Booths Mark the Months of Year and Contain Tempting Articles.

A novel two days' festival is being held at Freeman's hall, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Episcopal church which began on Wednesday afternoon and terminates this Thursday evening. The festival is carried out as "A Calendar," with twelve decorated booths to represent the different months.

The hall was a gay scene of activity both throughout the afternoon and evening and a large attendance greeted the ladies who had worked so untiringly to make this event a success.

The following are the booths and their attendants:

January—White and green, canopy effect; patchwork quilts and fancy puffs; Mrs. Charles Oxford, chairman; Mrs. H. E. Hutchinson.

February—Red, white and blue bunting, canopy effect; apron table; Mrs. A. M. Lamb, Mrs. S. J. Carl and Mrs. H. C. Twombly.

March—Yellow and green, canopy effect; candy booth; Miss Miriam Schumann, chairman; Miss Irene Johnson, Miss Mae Warren, Miss Hattie Oxford, Mrs. Leslie Davis.

April—Red and green, red roses, canopy effect; handkerchiefs; Mrs. Richard Bridle, chairman, and Mrs. John Bridle.

May—Green and red, canopy effect; center design of Maypole of red and green ribbons with dolls attached; doll table; Mrs. J. True Davis, Mrs. William Bridle.

June—Pink roses, canopy effect; infants' table; in charge of Miss Carrie Hickey.

July—Ice cream, cones and cakes; red, white and blue, canopy effect; Mrs. Albert Shedd, chairman; Mrs. Jacob Marshall, Mrs. Clarence P. Bodwell; servers, Misses Hazel Somerville, Leatherhood.

August—Green, canopy effect; preserves; Mrs. George B. Chadwick, chairman; Mrs. Arthur Nichols and Mrs. Tobias Taylor.

September—Orange and black, chrysanthemums; Japanese table, including Japanese novelties, lanterns; fancy needle cases, booklets, etc.; attendants in Japanese costume; Mrs. Harry Johnson, chairman; Mrs. Harry Crossley.

October—Green and white, canopy effect; grocery table; Mrs. Fred Robinson, chairman; Mrs. Percy Plaisied, Mrs. Sadie Mackay, Miss Gladys Robinson.

November—White, with turkey border, fancy crepe paper, canopy effect; mystery table; Mrs. Charles Jenness, chairman; Mrs. Clarence Parmenter, Miss Bertha Chappan, Miss Gertrude Meyer.

December—Red and green, evergreen, canopy effect; fancy work; Miss Margaret Jenness, chairman; Miss Edith Paul, Miss Bertha Grant, Mrs. Chester Norton.

During the evening the orchestra rendered several selections which forced them to enclose time and again. The orchestra consists of Miss Beatrice Oldfield, pianist; Wesley Downing, trombone; Clyde Robinson, violin; Justin French, cornet; John Dowd, drums.

Mrs. J. Howard Grover was the chairman of the entire affair and the success reflects much credit on her efforts.

A venison supper will be served from 6.30 to 8.30 this evening and the menu includes: Fish chowder, venison, boiled ham, rolls, pickles, doughnuts, assorted pies, tea, coffee.

Mr. James Schuman is chairman of the supper committee, assisted by the well-known servers, Misses Hazel Somerville, Leatherhood.

Elks will be held next Monday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock at the Portsmouth Theatre.
